What the Methodist Clergy Say About the Ministerial Service.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be held in Cincinnati in May next, and among other important questions which will engage the attention of the body will be the extension of the three years' term of ministerial service.

Dr. Ramsey, pastor of Christ M. E. Church, favors the extension of the term of service, but would not make it longer than two years.

Dr. Pershing, President of the Pittsburgh Female College, is decidedly opposed to any change from the present system. He thinks that a Wesley had expressed himself strongly that he could preach acceptably only two years to the same people, and if a minister with his talents and learning felt himself incapable of supplying the same pulpit any longer than two years, the majority of ministers of the present day, with the growing intelligence of our congregations, cannot preach acceptably in the same church an indefinite period.

Excited His Curiosity. A Returned Deadwooder Tells of His Stirring Little Experience.

"Deadwood," said the stranger, putting down his half eaten slice of lemon pie and taking a long pull at the milk, "I went there on the first rush made for the hills. Rather a wholesome now. When I got there I was dead broke—didn't have a dollar, didn't have a revolver, which a man'll often need out there worse'n a meal's vittles. I was probably the only man in the hills who didn't carry a firearm, and I was some lonesome, I tell you. The only weapon I had—I'm a blacksmith—was a rasp, a heavy file, you know, 'bout eighteen inches long, which I carried down in my back, the handle in easy reach just below my collar. Understand? Like the Arkansas man carries his bowie knife. I'm not exactly a temperance man. I just don't drink 'n' don't meddle with any other man's drinkin'—that's all. One day—I hadn't been in Deadwood long—I was sittin' in a saloon, 'n' only place a man kin set to see any society—when a feller come in, a regular hustler, with his can full and a quart over. Hed a revolver on each side of his belt 'n' looked vicious. 'Nothin' mean with me, 'n' I was sittin' in a saloon. 'Not any, thank you,' sez I. 'Not drink with me! Bill Featherhill! When I ask a tenderfoot to drink I expect him to prance right up 'n' no monkeyin'! You 'n'—"

Congressional Funerals. Washington Special to Intelligencer.

Congressional funerals are costly affairs as is illustrated by the publication of the annual report of the Clerk of the House, and the amount of money expended when a member dies is enough to keep a small family from want for many years.

The amount paid for the expenses of the funeral of Hon. Rush Clark, of Iowa, is set down at $1,448.40. It is not time a little light was thrown on the practice, as it prevails when a committee is appointed to attend the funeral of a deceased representative? A good many of the members regard such a duty as simply a junketing expedition and an opportunity to get a glimpse of the government.

The question of American silk culture is again attracting attention. Our 213 silk factories produced in 1876 silk goods to the value of $27,000,000. The same year the total consumption was $47,785,540, so that less than half of the demand was supplied by imports from abroad.

Coffee in Typhoid Fever. In a recent paper on typhoid fever, says: "Coffee has given an unhelped relief; after having dispensed it, we find, to our great surprise, that its action is as prompt as decisive. No sooner have our patients taken a few tablespoonfuls of it than their features become relaxed and they improve to their senses."

Dr. Guillaume, of the French navy, in a recent paper on typhoid fever, says: "Coffee has given an unhelped relief; after having dispensed it, we find, to our great surprise, that its action is as prompt as decisive. No sooner have our patients taken a few tablespoonfuls of it than their features become relaxed and they improve to their senses."

BISHOP SIMPSON'S YOUTHFUL DAYS. A Charity Correspondent Gathers Some Interesting Reminiscences of the Youth of the Great Divine.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial writing from Cadiz, Ohio, says he interviewed an "old timer" there who said: "Cadiz has also the honor of raising one of the most celebrated divines, as well as one of the most distinguished of cavalry officers, has she not?"

"Yes, Bishop Simpson lived in Cadiz until he was about twenty-five years old. He was educated by his uncle, Matthew Simpson, who had a private academy for boys, and it is to the careful and judicious instruction of his uncle that the great Bishop owes his well rounded education. His uncle was a remarkable man. He was a man of strong character, great will power and splendid accomplishments, and presided over, perhaps, one of the best private schools in the country. He died, of his own pocket, the necessary expense of young Simpson's raising, and placed him on the high road to fame. So great had become his cultivation, that when he was about twenty-five he was elected to a chair in Allegheny College, and I think it was the chair of natural sciences, though upon this point I am not certain."

"What sort of an appearing boy was he?" "He was a big, overgrown, awkward fellow, exceedingly timid, and one that served as the butt of ridicule and fun for his associates. For a time he attended the public schools of Cadiz, and in going to or coming from them he would never go by the public streets, but take the back alleys. He was sensitive to his appearance, and never cared to assert his true manliness, of which he had a big stock, but allowed his fellow-schoolmates to run over him and to do as they pleased with him."

"Did he show an early religious inclination?" "Yes, when he was quite young he became a earnest and regular attendant of church and Sunday schools, and participated in the exercises more than any one of his age. The first Methodist Sunday school that was organized in Cadiz was organized by Simpson, and it is in existence to this day. He early studied for the ministry, and whether admitted to the ministry while at Cadiz I do not know, but any way he used to frequently preach in the country churches around there."

"Did he give much promise as a pulpit orator?" "Not much, though it is said that he was a logical talker, and possessed a great fund of information on the subjects that he treated of from the pulpit. He was a hard student, and a close investigator, and he was well rounded as a man as could be found. Instead of spending his time in attending dances, parties and picnics, he used his time in reading and thinking. He lived apart from his associates, and was a general fellow, and it was only after he had ripened up that his old companions saw that he had been green, and he had been smart."

THAT striking is not, in the aggregate, profitable to the laboring people is a conclusion long ago reached by practical men who have carefully examined the subject and collected its details and statistics. Such an opinion is strongly reinforced by the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics and Labor, which does its work more thoroughly and presents more reliable and valuable results than any similar institution in the United States.
